

Thomas J. Plewes is a Senior Program Officer and study director for the Committee on National Statistics, Division of Behavioral and Social Sciences and Education. In this position, he has responsibility for a study of the measurement of research and development at the National Science Foundation, and for a study of the international trade traffic data at the Bureau of Transportation Statistics. Prior to joining CNSTAT, Plewes served as Chief of the Army Reserve, and, prior to that, as Associate Commissioner for Employment and Unemployment Statistics at the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. He had responsibility for the Nation's labor market information programs. He holds a B.A. in Economics from Hope College, and an M.A. in Economics from the George Washington University.